On May 31st, 2018, the future of gaming changed when Blizzard sent shockwaves through the gaming industry with its announcement of Overwatch. In this recap, we'll look at how we got to the present day and what we know about the long-rumored sequel, Blizzcon 2018! How the Overwatch Company Met In order to understand what led to the creation of Overwatch, we need to travel back to the past. In 2005, Mike Morhaime, CEO of Blizzard Entertainment, along with his friend, Pete Vesterbacka, created a small studio called Facepalm Games Inc. They wanted to create a "spiritual successor" to Populous, a game that had originally been created by Peter Molyneux at 22Cans. They hired Molyneux to be a creative consultant for Facepalm and began working on a concept called World of Warcraft: The Next Generation. This World of Warcraft spin-off eventually led to the creation of Overwatch. How Overwatch Launched Blizzard's success led them to launch a new studio in Los Angeles. In 2012, Blizzard LA hired Blizzard Entertainment's Creative Director, Jeff Kaplan, and long-time Blizzard employee, Pete Viscolli, to run the studio. During this time, Overwatch was slowly being created. The concept was that of an FPS (First-Person Shooter) game where heroes could be swapped out at any time and the game would be continuously updated as they were added. The studio's first release was a beta version of the multiplayer shooter, which was completed in 2014. Shortly after this release, Alex "Sommer" Hardiman was hired as the game's art director. "I was so excited to work on the team [at Blizzard LA] and have such a clear vision for the project I wanted to avoid being a complete asshole, which is hard to do when you're a perfectionist," he said.
